RBD DEATHS MOUNT: BANQUO MURDERED, FLEANCE ESCAPES

by WEIRD SISTERS

BANQUO, WHO sat on the directors' board at The Royal Bank of Dunsinane in a non-executive role, was brutally dispatched last night. His death comes just days after the bank's CEO and Chairman was also murdered.

Banquo, 58, was out jogging with his 22-year-old daughter Fleance in Menteith Park. Fleance had been serving an internship at RBD as PA to the late Duncan. The pair were apparently set upon by a knife-wielding lunatic.

Banquo was slashed at least twenty times on his face and body. Fleance managed to evade the attackers and was being treated for shock this morning.

Lennox, Dunsinane's Commercial Manager, spoke exclusively to the City Times this morning. In a moving tribute, she called the murdered non-exec "an inspiration."

"Banquo was a key figure at Dunsinane. He wasn't in the office every day, but you always knew when he was. His powerful voice echoed down the corridors. He made sure he stopped to say hello to everyone, no matter how lowly. He even had a kind word for some of the junior traders."

Banquo's value was felt not just at the Royal Bank of Dunsinane but across the City. After a stellar career which culminated in a long stint as partner at Cazenove, he held the chair at a number of key institutions.

Duncan (who was a couple of years above Banquo at Winchester School) described him as "my wing man, the guy I always want by my side."

Meanwhile Macduff, formerly RBD's Human Resources Director, spoke of her "increasing despair" at the savage turn life in the Square Mile is taking.

Banquo was a popular and well-respected figure throughout the City.

"It's like the f***ing Wild West out there," she told this paper. "People expect to get hired and fired, promoted and overlooked... but killed? What the hell's the City coming to?" Macduff was speaking from an undisclosed location, having taken shelter in the wake of Duncan's murder last week. Amid fears for her own safety, there is a great deal of speculation about her next move.

City Times Issues Macbeth Warning: Beware Macduff

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF HECATE

"BEWARE MACDUFF. Beware the Thane of Fife." That's the clear and unambiguous warning the City Times is issuing to Dunsinane CEO Macbeth this morning.

Confusion reigned in the immediate aftermath of Duncan's horrific assassination. The murderers, themselves murdered, were thus rendered unable to account for their crime or to explain under whose instruction they committed the bloody deed.

Suspicion swirled around; there were snipes, jibes, accusations and counter-accusations. Was it "cruel parricide," as suggested by Macbeth? Duncan's children Malcolm and Donalbain fled, and the question remains unanswered.

And what of Macduff? Amidst this confusion, the dazzling young Human Resources Director, an extremely powerful and forthright figure at the bank, simply slipped away. Her exact location remains a mystery (although the City Times managed to reach her by phone this morning).

Macduff was careful not to express strong views about the latest tragedy or to apportion blame, but her voice was soaked with despair. She is known to be fiercely moral, and it is unthinkable that she has decided to spend a few weeks on the golf course. Macduff is plotting something, that's for sure. What exactly she has in mind, only time will tell.
